

Estate Litigation

Josh Ross represented a client who was appointed Personal Representative of a family member's estate. After the former husband of the family member died, the estate pursued claims against the former husband's estate, claiming that he owed the estate over $200,000 in unpaid debts. After filing suit, Ross and his client demonstrated the validity of the debts and negotiated a highly favorable settlement of the claims.